for a greater Edmonton

Before Stephen Mandel first became our Mayor, Edmonton was a city we felt passionate about and believed in (“we” the authors of this letter—a cross-section of the city’s business, creative and community sectors). We also felt Edmonton was not living up its potential. Stephen Mandel came to office promising to make Edmonton a Capital City again. He has done that, to a degree beyond all our hopes. In the past six years, Edmonton has experienced a reawakening, and although there are many reasons for such an enviable civic transformation, there also one common denominator linking every aspect of this resurgence.

His name is Stephen Mandel.

The LRT is growing. We heard the words no more crap, and now attractive office towers, condos and lofts are going up in a revitalized downtown, not to mention a stunning new art gallery in Sir Winston Churchill Square. Our infrastructure is receiving necessary upgrading. Our creative talent has been given guidance and enthusiasm through a solid ten-year plan. Our relationships with the province and the Capital Region have never been stronger. The airport lands will be redeveloped to benefit all Edmontonians. A taskforce on crime reduction is already having great impact. EXPO 2017 is a real possibility, not just a fantasy. Communities and neighbourhoods are more cohesive, more optimistic.

Stephen Mandel is knows these things are not just his doing, he knows that Edmontonians, when encouraged and supported, are eminently capable of creating a city that is not just livable, but desirable. In short, we the undersigned feel that the leadership of Stephen Mandel has been crucial to creating a greater Edmonton. We have the chance to keep that relationship alive for another three years. Choosing Stephen Mandel as our Mayor in 2010 is the right vote for those with business sense, for those with creative sense, for those with political sense. It’s a vote for common sense.
